

Capital Markets Snapshot

Week ending June 23, 2023

In a shortened trading week, Federal Reserve Chairman Powell continued to be a major factor in the markets as his semi-annual testimony before Congress implied continuing rate hikes. The Chairman stated that a majority of the FOMC members believe further rate hikes will be necessary this year as inflation remains well above their target level. The market is currently pricing in a 72% probability of a 25-basis point rate hike at the July FOMC according to the CME Fedwatch Tool.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- The inversion between the 2- and 10-year U.S. Treasuries continues to increase closing at -100 basis points at the end of the week.
- Despite higher mortgage rates compared to one year ago, the housing market data continued to come in strong this week with both housing starts and existing home sales coming in above forecast.
- The Bank of England and the Norway Central Bank both raised their key interest rates by 50 basis points last week in their continued fight against inflation. The May core inflation reading in England reached 7.1%, a 31-year high.
