

Capital Markets Snapshot

Week ending March 1, 2024

Despite some mixed economic news this week, the equity markets continued to reach record levels. The Nasdaq and S&P 500 both closed at all-time highs on Friday, after ending February with their best monthly return in nine years. The economic data early in the week came in as expected with the Price Consumption Expenditures (PCE) Index for January showing a gain of 0.3%. However, Friday's releases of the ISM Manufacturing Index and the University of Michigan Consumer Sentiment Survey both came in below expectations.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- U.S. Treasury yields fell for the week on the weaker than expected economic indicators. On Friday, the 2-year U.S. Treasury yield had its biggest decline since the end of January.
- In the housing market, new listings rose by 13% on a year-over-year basis in February according to Redfin. This marked the largest increase in three years. The current rate on a 30-year mortgage is at 6.9% according to Freddie Mac.
- Following this week's batch of economic data, the CME Fedwatch Tool is showing June as the earliest chance of a rate cut by the Federal Reserve. The probability increased to 56.8% from 52.3% the week before.

Equity Markets Overview

- As mentioned, the Nasdaq and S&P 500 were both up for the week, while the DJIA remained flat. A majority of the eleven S&P 500 sectors were higher for the week, led by Information Technology which was up 2.5%.
- The strong interest in Artificial Intelligence continued to drive technology stocks such as Nvidia and Advanced Micro Devices higher. As a result, the Philadelphia Semiconductor Index reached a record high this week.
- Fourth quarter earnings season is starting to wind down, but the past week saw positive earnings reports from Dell Technologies, Salesforce, Dominos, and Zoom. Retailer Best Buy beat earnings estimates but warned of softer sales and layoffs this year, while Macy's announced plans to close 150 stores following a revenue miss for the quarter.
- There are a few remaining earnings reports scheduled for this week including those from major retailers Target, Ross Stores, Nordstrom, and Costco.
