

Capital Markets Snapshot

Week ending March 15, 2024

Economic data showed a slight pickup in inflationary pressures which may keep the Fed on pause at their FOMC meeting this week. Both the Consumer Price Index (CPI) and the Producer Price Index (PPI) came in slightly higher than expected last week. Annualized headline CPI came in with a gain of 3.2%, while the Core CPI, which excludes food and energy, was up by 3.8%. The headline Producer Price Index saw a monthly increase of 0.6% versus expectations of a gain of 0.3%. The annualized rate of 1.6% for the PPI is the highest level since September of last year

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- Yields were up this week on the disappointing inflation news. The 10-year U.S. Treasury yield climbed to 4.31% from 4.08% the week before.
- As mentioned, the FOMC will hold their March meeting on Tuesday and Wednesday of this week. No move is expected at this meeting and expectations for a June rate cut dropped to 55.2% this week according to CME Fedwatch Tool.
- Other economic releases last week included an upside surprise in U.S. Industrial Production, a slightly reduced reading on the University of Michigan Consumer Confidence Survey and lower than expected February U.S. Retail Sales.
