

Capital Markets Snapshot

Week ending April 19, 2024

- The equity markets were down for the third week in a row on continued tensions in the Middle East and hawkish comments from Federal Reserve Chairman Jay Powell. On Tuesday, Powell noted current economic data has not proved a rate cut is needed and "it's likely to take longer than expected to achieve that confidence". By the end of the week, expectations for a July rate cut dropped to 35% according to CME Fedwatch Tool as many economists are now looking at a possible move at the September FOMC meeting.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- Yields were up again this week with the 10-year US Treasury reaching its highest level since November 2023.
- There was disappointing news for the housing market this week as March data came in below expectations with housing permits at their lowest level in seventh months and a decline in existing home sales. In addition, the 30-year mortgage rose above 7% for the first time this year according to Freddie Mac.
- Other economic data this week included a positive March retail sales report which came in above expectations at 0.7%.
